The suggested title on the response form fits better the scope of the paper, “Commercial Building Space Traffic Flow Design Based on the Post-Occupancy Evaluation” maybe consider adding a case study given that it is clearly stated in the conclusion that the results are specific and may not be generalized.

Thank you very much for your further suggestions and careful reading.

After combining the suggestions of the academic editors and discussing this paper as a research type paper, the title has been decided as " Search on the Commercial Building Space Traffic Flow Design Based on the Post-Occupancy Evaluation". If you think there is anything wrong with it, we can discuss and revise it again.

Regarding the issue of a single case study, we acknowledge that this is a limitation of this paper, but different studies have their focus. We enter into an in-depth analysis of the commercial building space in the Nanpu era to study the optimization of traffic flow in a specific commercial space and provide analytical ideas for subsequent commercial building spaces of the same type. We felt that analyzing multiple cases simultaneously would make it difficult to achieve the initial objectives of the team's research. By selecting one case study, it was easier for us to access various resources about the subject of the study. In a possible follow-up study, it was also easier to conduct in-depth observation and analysis of the surrounding pedestrian flow, vehicular flow, and housing to gain a clearer understanding of the improved situation of the project.
